Hepatic expression of a low molecular weight protein (Mr 100,000) during hepatic regeneration and chronic porphyria. Hepatic expression of a low molecular weight protein in porphyria control rats has been investigated during hepatic regeneration, after phenobarbital and phlorizin injections and in porphyric porphyria induced with 3-methyl-4-benzoic acidone. Western blot analysis on immunoblotted electrophoretic gradients revealed that it is specifically inducible by regeneration in control rats and that it is greatly reduced in porphyric rats. MRI-based prediction of osteoporotic vertebral fractures in the elderly: comparison with radiographs and dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry. A total of 31 elderly patients (18 male, 13 female, mean age 73.6 years, range 60-88 years) suffering from osteoporosis were evaluated by magnetic resonance imaging (MRI), conventional radiography, and dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry (DEXA) to detect osteoporotic vertebral fractures. Two experienced observers independently evaluated five MRI parameters of signal intensity (SI) (T(1), T(2), T(1)rho, and T(2)rho) and structural integrity (morphology) in 31 vertebrae (L 570a42141b
