Resize an image The most common and basic task with Photoshop is simply to resize an image. The methods that are discussed in this section all accomplish this task, and they work well with both TIFF and JPEG files. .jpg) If you resize an image that has been compressed with some type of format such as JPEG or GIF (rather than being saved as a normal TIFF image file), you shouldn't expect that the original image will be completely restored. Not only does the quality of a compressed file fall as image size shrinks, but also the actual file size can be reduced considerably. For example, if you resize a 300-pixel-high image from a 120KB TIFF file to a 100-pixel-high image, the file's size will be reduced by 52KB. If you resize a 300-pixel-high image from a 50KB GIF file to a 100-pixel-high image, the image's size will be reduced by 25KB. How much these sizes will be reduced depends on the compression quality you use when you compressed the image in the first place. The larger the ratio of a file's size to image size, the greater the compression loss, and the smaller the file size that can be expected. An image's size, which is measured in pixels, is unaffected by compression methods. Even if you reduce an image from a normal TIFF image file to a 100-pixel-high GIF file, the same 1,200-pixel-wide image has exactly the same number of pixels. Many image editors have tools to resize an image. The following sections describe a few of those.

Q: How to use a differential equation to find the saddle point of a function? Given that $$y=\frac{x-1}{x}+\frac{x^2}{x+3}$$ determine the maxima and minima of the function I know there is a standard method to find the critical points of a function of a single variable, but how do you do this when there are multiple variables? I first found the first derivative of the function: $$f'(x)=\frac{x+3}{x^2}$$ $$f'(x)0$$ $$f'(x)>0, \forall x0$ for $x>-3$ and $f'(x)
